3. The meeting was a general briefing for Dr. Ikle and his staff on the organization of the intelligence community and the role of the CIA. Following the briefing, there was a general discussion of the types of intelligence support provided by CIA to ACDA. Much of the discussion focused on the complications attendant to problems of verifying and monitoring compliance with any MBFR agreement. The use of Sensors was suggested as one of the possible means of monitoring an agreement. Dr. Steininger agreed to look into this question from the point of view of determining if existing Sensor devices could be used for such purposes or what was being done in this field in the way of research and development.

4. There was also some discussion of the need for the United States Government to organize to monitor its own compliance with the SALT agreement. During this discussion, Dr. Steininger
